I followed the suspect across the bridge as he made his way from the bank by the light rail station to the meeting place, a smoky bar, where he was immediately drawn to a rack of colorful magazines. I felt certain that this was a familiar cue from his handler—chalk it up to experience. He flipped open a copy of Flag Fancy magazine to an advertisement for vacation packages, thought for a while, then dropped it on the table before running out. Is this the break we needed in the case? Signs point to yes.
