Bad with Names

You call your friend to decide what to see today in Vegas. He seemed normal initially, but then he starts rambling on at length. Maybe there's a method to his madness – something about the differences between what he's saying and what he means. Is he trying to tell you something?

"Hey! Today's been alright. I was doing OK, but then I had so much food at that Chinese buffet – the lazy Violet just kept spinning round and round. Almost felt like my Oleksandersohn's apple couldn't keep up with swallowing... What should we see today? Hmm, maybe go to Caesar's Palace like every Tom, Schmetterling, and Thalassa? Or swing by Treasure Island to watch them hoist the Jolly William. But I'm not really in the mood for going out right now... aww, sorry for being a negative Radhakrishna. I need to recharge. Tell you what, I'm gonna do some jumping Scheherazades in my room to work off that buffet. Then I'll grab a hot cup of Xiaoping, or maybe a Bloody Rutherford from the bar. After that, I'll take a nap and snuggle with my Raggedy Jupiter. Wake me up when you figure something out."
