Keepin' It Reel

I found a new slot machine at the casino today. Instead of pretty little pictures, it has letters on the reels. To have a winning combination, the letters along a payline must spell a word from left to right.

I did really well one time – all except three paylines had winning combinations. But then a computer virus took over the machine and wiped out all of the letters, and the machine won't let me cash out until I fill in all the letters correctly. I don't remember any of the words, but here is what I remember about the words, in no particular order:

- A group of things, usually held together; a considerable amount
- Flashlight? Never heard of that before in Australia
- Used in laser printers
- People usually leave Vegas with less of this
- The rule that is invoked when the local Little League team scores too many runs
- Wide piece of furniture that can offer relative comfort to many people at a time, both indoors and outdoors
