Now is not the time to use that!

Today, I decided to see what schools were like in the past. The teacher was very strict! We were all forced to sit upright and maintain our perfect posture for the entire class. It was downright brutal! I headed back the way I came so I could make my foxtrot dance lessons, but halfway back I realize I'd left my time device in the classroom, so I dashed across the schoolyard to pick it up.

I had so much fun with my dance lessons, I decided to travel and learn more dances! I was paired up with Juliet and we started to learn the dance. We danced in a downwards arc, did it again, and then danced back up to where we'd started. By the end of the day I was very tired, but I'd learned so much!

I met with Albert Einstein today, but unfortunately he abruptly left to go teach a class. I followed him down to the second floor of the Delta building, but then lost him. I wandered the hallway for a bit before realizing I wasn't right; he'd gone to the first floor, and so I left to return to the stairs and wandered down. Upon reaching the basement, Einstein was waiting for me right at the end of the hall. "Bravo! Took you long enough!" Needless to say, it was an embarrassing moment. But don't worry, I'll get my revenge next November when we meet in India.

Today I got to meet Clint Eastwood, who is hands down the best Western actor in history. I talked with him for hours about his career, and he was very honest about it. It's nice to talk with someone who's on the up and up for a change! I asked him if he was thinking about retiring – "Yeah right," he said. "I'm the alpha male of the genre - why would I ever stop?"

My friend gave me a time point and told me to visit it to meet a very special artist. I arrived at a pitch-black concert hall in Lima. Then the lights came on and I saw Rick Astley, who started a live performance of "Never Gonna Give You Up." Time-travel Rickrolling – now that's a new one!

I've been going through a silent era film phase lately, so I figured paying a visit to Charlie Chaplin would be fun. To my dismay, he was nowhere to be found! I started in Portsmouth, travelled North to Reading, Southeast to Brighton, and back North to London, but he was nowhere to be found! Guess I'll have to try again some other time.

Getting to meet up with a president – pretty cool. Getting to meet up at a National Park – even better! Teddy and I met at the Grand Canyon today. Right away we started shouting at the canyon and listened to the echo, then we travelled down into the canyon itself! We left all caution to the wind as we explored the canyon. We parted ways soon after, with Teddy going back to Washington and me heading Southeast to Albuquerque.

I've always wanted to see some old-fashioned baseball, so I bought a kilo of peanuts and left for the ballpark. I made my way down as close to the field as I could so I wouldn't miss any of the action. The right-handed pitcher tossed fastball after fastball down the plate, much to the chagrin of the fans. They gave him a standing ovation as he left the mound!

I ran into Mike Tyson today. He looked up and told me not to cross him. I tried to ask him a couple of questions but he vanished.

It's time for the big game of 2050! Hotel California played as the teams rushed down onto the field, and the game began! Right away the action began as the ball was picked up and run for a touchdown! My friend told me that the game was going to depend on a last-second field goal. As it turns out, he was right! The ball went up in the air, and the entire stadium went quiet. Unfortunately, my time device urgently needed to recharge, so we had to leave before we could see what had happened. Guess I'll find out in 34 years.

I've always wanted to play golf at a professional level – except I'm not very good at it. So I visited The Open and asked Phil Mickelson for some advice. It worked out well – sort of! On my first hole, I hit the ball high up in the air, but it split in half! The pieces flew off at angles to the left and right and landed in a water hazard and sand trap, respectively. Bet they've never had to score that before!
