

Dark Cavern

By Andy Crane

Along the southern shore of the northern lake, I discovered a dark cavern. As I entered, the cave quickly became pitch black and I was completely blind. The batteries in my flash light had gone out so I had to use my hands to feel along the walls and I felt a series of bumps. At first I thought that it was just part of the natural rock formation, but as I felt more of the markings, it became obvious that these were in a pattern. What could it mean?

We've been here four days now, and I'm beginning to feel very strange. I've had a headache for almost a full day now and nothing is helping. Others in the expedition have become increasingly tired and one has even passed out. It's probably nothing, just heat stroke. I hate being away from home, and feeling sick makes it even worse.
