

Stonehenge

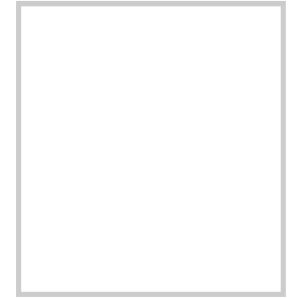

This quaint monument located in southern England consists of high standing stones called megaliths arranged in rings. Archaeologists believe they date from 2500BC to 2000BC, with the older portions from as early as 3100BC. The purpose is still unclear, but legends and explanations range from Merlin the wizard having asked a giant to build it for him to it being a temple for pagan gods or some even say that it is being the creation of the devil.
