

The Hunger Games

by Eric Frackleton

When coming up with ideas for their latest masterpiece, it is best that authors don't do so on an empty stomach. Below are some initial surprising book synopses. In the end, a small change was all that was necessary to become the classics they are today.

- Scientists use genetic engineering to produce prehistoric swine with disastrous results.
- A severed pig's head rules over island-bound potato-based plane crash survivors, but the fattest one gets eaten by the rest.
- Meg borrows 4 herbs from singers Paul and Art, but is surprised to discover the last one has been folded in half.
- Everyone's favorite wizards are almost done with school, and this year they are on an important quest to find a single crisp (or chip in the American edition) that is contained in a tube and 50% plasma.
- For Thanksgiving, Heinz launches an innovative promotion: their turkey sauce comes in a different color in each US state.
- The biography of a salty, twisted bread item that is stuck on a raft with a tiger, from its very beginnings as dough down to the very last bite.
- A cookbook featuring a recipe for a shriveled up grape submerged in sucrose.
- A play that is based on a true story in which Bertram's father passes away and bequeaths his precious orange peel to his son.
- Ebenezer chooses the wrong candy from his box of assorted yuletide chocolates and is haunted by its filling.
- The story of a horde of rodents who love to eat spheres of beef.
- On July 15, Helena wakes up a few hours after going to bed with a hankering for dairy.
- Pierre has only two loves in this world: Epic battles and pit-filled fruit.
- A short man in a magical place that is not unlike New Zealand rules over a bucket of chicken that he brought back from Buffalo.
- The story of an equine named Bree who lives in a magical land and loves meat alternatives.
- Arthur, Ford, and their pals find themselves in their ultimate zany adventure (excluding any possible reboots by other authors) when they discover their meals are not quite kosher.
- The tale of a Renaissance painter's aquatic pet, which went on to become a staple of Massachusetts.
- Santiago is a senior citizen from Cuba who develops a strong attachment to a bottle of Polar-brand lime-flavored carbonated water.
- Mr. Wiggin is back with an important message for wheat and rye alike.