

Breaking Windows

Windows were broken; shots were fired; people screaming in fear and panic. Security was apparently not enough to deter such attempt. Response from the police was fortunately fast and efficient enough that there were no casualties and the heist was quickly stopped. Center of attention was mainly the special vault that the bank kept — apparently there was a precious stone being guarded for an undisclosed client and neither the bank nor the police are confirming any rumors of the incident.

Knowledge of this was meant to be very closely kept but somehow it was leaked and led the police to suspect that it was an internal job. Base analysis of the crime didn't help much either as none of the robbers are confessing anything; it is, however, suspected that our criminal is behind the plan.

Months down the road, this incident was still discussed everywhere.
